Considered to be the Philippine national dance aside from its rival, Cariñoosa, but still unconfirmed. This dance imitates the movements of the tinikling bird walking through tall grasses and tree branches. It requires two bamboo poles. The challenge of this dance is to try not to get your feet hurt between the poles.

It’s danced with fans and bamboo poles, and is an expression of grace delicately balanced within danger, as the dancers must step nimbly between moving bamboo poles that could trip them up or crush their ankles with a single mistake. Catherine Hernandez’s play Singkil is a highly symbolic and evocative expression of this dance.
