Social constructionism is a theory of knowledge in sociology and communication theory that examines the development of jointly-constructed understandings of the world that form the basis for shared assumptions about reality. The theory of social constructionism was introduced in the 1966 book The Social Construction of Reality, by sociologists Peter L. Berger and Thomas Luckmann which explained the existence of social facts, social objects, and social institutions from a phenomenological and broadly symbolic interactionist perspective, with a focus on the importance of language, as published in 1966.

Social constructionism is a theory of knowledge that holds that characteristics typically thought to be immutable and permanent—such as gender, race, class, ability, and sexuality—are products of human definition and interpretation shaped by cultural and historical contexts (Subramaniam 2010).

The Construction of Social Reality by John Rogers Searle

In 1966 sociologists Peter Berger and Thomas Luckmann wrote a book called The Social Construction of Reality. In it, they argued that society is created by human and human interaction, which they call habitualization. In other words, society is, in fact, “fake.”

Social Construction of Reality - Introduction to Sociology

The term “social construction of reality” refers to the theory that the way we present ourselves to other people is shaped partly by our interactions with others, as well as by our life experiences. How we were raised and what we were raised to believe affect how we present ourselves, how we perceive others, and how others perceive us.

What is the social construction of reality? - Quora

At its core, the social construction of reality “theory” suggests an ontological assumption that is at the very core of human existence. This assumption that humans attempt to make sense out of the world has existed since Greek philosophers debated the meaning of life.

The social construction of reality is the idea that reality is what society deems reality. It is not necessarily what is real. In other words, it views things that people commonly view as “real” as a flexible reality that is defined by processes of communication. The following are illustrative examples of social constructions.

Social construction is the theory that reality is a socially constructed phenomenon. It is not necessarily what is real.
